TASC Leadership Award Luncheon Celebrates Recovery

TASC’s 2007 Leadership Award Luncheon featured speakers and singers who together embodied the theme of National Alcohol and Drug Addiction Recovery Month: Join the Voices for Recovery: Saving Lives, Saving Dollars.

The September 19 luncheon, held at the InterContinental Chicago hotel, opened with lively and uplifting music by the Hope House Men’s Choir, whose members all have overcome alcohol and other drug problems. The luncheon closed with a festive drawing of raffle prizes, including grand prizes from American Airlines. In between, local and national speakers drew ovations for sharing their personal experiences and professional perspectives on seeking truth, justice, and recovery.

Dr. H. Westley Clark, director of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration’s Center for Substance Abuse Treatment (CSAT), spoke about the societal costs related to substance use disorders and the benefits that result from investing in treatment and recovery. He recognized TASC for being “on the frontier of change and social responsibility.”

TASC’s 2007 Leadership Award honorees were acknowledged for their contributions from the fields of law and journalism, respectively.

Timothy C. Evans, chief judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, received TASC’s Justice Leadership Award in recognition for his leadership in providing innovative and cost effective interventions throughout the court system for individuals with substance abuse and/or chronic mental health problems.

Madeleine Doubek, managing editor of the Daily Herald, accepted the Public Voice Leadership Award on behalf of the suburban daily newspaper. TASC honored the Daily Herald for its consistent, thoughtful, and in-depth news coverage of social issues such as underage drinking and alternatives to incarceration.

Several individuals shared their moving personal experiences of addiction and recovery. There was Cheryl Cline, who became addicted to crack while in college and began her recovery while in prison. Next was Beatrice Bates, who witnessed her daughter’s daily struggles and triumphs in remaining drug-free. The final speaker was Shrong Clemons, who transformed his experiences of addiction and incarceration into poems of healing and discovery. (See insert for photos and speech excerpts.)

TASC President Melody M. Heaps summed up the luncheon’s theme. “As we witness today, more and more people and families are publicly acknowledging their struggle with addictions and rejoicing in their recovery. We applaud them and the friends and families who have traveled with them on their journeys.”

TASC, Inc. (Treatment Alternatives for Safe Communities) is an independent, statewide, nonprofit agency that helps people transition beyond their involvement in criminal justice systems and government programs, and into health and self-sufficiency in the community. Adults and youth who have drug problems or other difficulties are referred to TASC by courts, corrections, child welfare, and other Illinois government service systems, and TASC manages their access to community-based treatment and support. In addition, through research, public policy advocacy, training, and consultation, TASC works to improve the social factors that affect our clients and communities. Visit us online at www.tasc.org.
Governor Rod Blagojevich has signed into law Senate Bill 1625, which prohibits the marketing of alcopops, or fruit-flavored alcoholic beverages, to minors.

Senator Carol Ronen (D-Chicago) and Representative Greg Harris (D-Chicago), sponsors of the bill, joined representatives from the Governor’s office and prevention advocates to announce the new law at a press conference held at TASC on September 14.

“By signing this legislation, the Governor has sealed our commitment to reducing underage drinking,” said Sen. Ronen. “We are responsible for our children, and we need to fight outside influences pressuring them to break the law.”

Alcopops are hard liquor malt beverages that are combined with sweet and fruity flavors which make them appealing to teens. Packaged similar to soda pop, they include brands such as Mike’s Hard Lemonade, Bacardi Silver, and Smirnoff Ice.

“There’s no better demonstration than to take a close look at some of these beverages and see how similar they look to non-alcoholic beverages and how attractive they are in terms of their bottling,” said Allen Sandusky, board president of the Illinois Alcoholism and Drug Dependence Association (IADDA).

“Alcopop advertisers use the lure of youth and popularity to attract teenagers, especially females, to their alcoholic products,” said Rep. Harris. “We must protect children from the dangers of underage drinking by putting a stop to ads that make it look ‘cool’.”

The new law prohibits the advertising, promoting, or marketing of alcopops to children. Violators will be fined $500 for a first offense and $1,000 for a second or subsequent offense.

The signing of the bill represented the culmination of months of outreach by advocates and service providers across the state, including TASC and other IADDA members.

The alcopops legislation is but one step toward reducing underage drinking. A 2005 study conducted by Monitoring the Future found that 74 percent of high school seniors had tried alcopops, and 31 percent of high school seniors had drunk alcopops in the last 30 days.

The Law

The new law prohibits the advertising, promoting, or marketing of alcopops to minors. It prohibits:

- the use of cartoons and youth-oriented photos in alcopops advertising
- sponsorship of athletic events where the intended audience is primarily children
- billboards advertising alcopops within 500 feet of a school, public park, amusement park, or place of worship
- the display of alcopops in video games, theater productions, or other live performances where the intended audience is primarily children
Voices for Recovery

“The challenge for TASC today, and for those of you who care about our work and the fundamentals of a just society, is to challenge irrational public policies, to promote safe alternatives to incarceration, to support public health services for treating addiction as the disease it is, and to think about how we must come to understand the phenomenon of drug abuse and addiction in our midst.

I am happy to report that many in the room today—our friends in the justice system, our judges, state’s attorneys, public defenders and corrections officials — have joined in that challenge. We are graced in this state by strong and competent treatment providers, upon which TASC relies and without whom recovery from addiction is not possible.”

- Melody M. Heaps, TASC President

TASC President Melody M. Heaps with Cheryl Cline of Aurora, IL

Cheryl told how TASC’s Winners’ Circle provided the support she needed when she returned home from prison newly sober and without employment. With four years in recovery, Cheryl is now a certified addictions counselor and is pursuing a master’s degree in social work.

“I truly believe that TASC helped me get to where I am today.”

Beatrice Bates of Chicago, IL and TASC VP Peter Palanca

Beatrice credited TASC’s Juvenile Justice staff for helping her daughter Janice, and the whole family, gain the hope and strength they needed to succeed.

“I guess that’s what I like most about TASC. They not only look out for the best interest of Janice and our family, but they do so with such relentless dedication.”

Shrong Clemons of Chicago, IL shared his journey toward recovery in his poem “Awaken.”

So from this day I proclaim
A new way
And on this day comes a new life

Shrong was also featured in “Maximum Capacity,” a segment of PBS’s NOW with David Brancaccio which aired nationally this summer.

Music was provided by Hope House Men’s Choir, led by Stanley Ratliff.

The members of the Hope House Men’s Choir share their journeys of healing and recovery through gospel music.
Chief Judge Evans credited TASC’s expertise and its role in keeping the judiciary informed about the latest evidence-based practices for addressing substance abuse and mental health problems.

“We need science that can stand the test in courts... TASC is a leader throughout this country.”

In describing the impetus behind the Daily Herald’s series of articles regarding increased drug use among suburban youth, Ms. Doubek stated, “We began to notice in our obituary notices that too many young people were dying – and they were not car accidents.”

Outstanding Leaders Honored

TASC Leadership Awards are presented to individuals or organizations who have made significant contributions to the health and safety of communities in Illinois.

The 2007 recipients were:

Audrey M. Walker became TASC’s director of Human Resources in July. Ms. Walker has specialized in human resources for more than 16 years, including five years as vice president for Chicago Youth Centers. Prior to joining TASC, Ms. Walker led her own consulting agency, assisting small to mid-sized agencies with their human resources needs.

Ms. Walker serves on the board of Alliance for Community Peace in Chicago. She received her undergraduate degree in Business Administration from Chicago State University and her MBA from Aurora University.

TASC VP Peter Palanca Elected to IADDA Board

TASC Vice President Peter Palanca has been elected to serve on the board of directors of the Illinois Alcoholism and Drug Dependence Association (IADDA).

IADDA is a statewide advocacy organization that represents more than 100 prevention and treatment agencies across Illinois. IADDA members educate government officials in Springfield, Illinois and Washington, D.C., and work to increase the public’s understanding of substance abuse, addiction, and recovery.

There are currently 24 IADDA board members, each of whom is elected to a two-year term. TASC has been a member of IADDA since 1979.
TASC’s Benneth Lee Receives National Recovery Award

Benneth “Benny” Lee, community liaison and reentry specialist for TASC, was honored at the Johnson Institute’s America Honors Recovery luncheon for his work in guiding others toward long-term recovery. The luncheon, held in late September at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., honored six individuals who use their own recovery experiences to help others affected by alcohol and other drug addiction.

“Our six honorees are part of an emerging generation of survivors who are proud of their success and humbled by their experience,” said Johnny Allem, president and CEO of the Johnson Institute.

Once a high-profile Chicago gang leader who cycled in and out of prison, Benny has dedicated the past 18 years to working with individuals, families, and communities affected by drug use and crime. He has pioneered new strategies in working with gang-affiliated individuals with drug problems and traveled globally to train corrections professionals on how to work effectively with former offenders.

“For each person, we have to pull from him a new perception of himself. And we have to address how he will function in life safely,” said Benny. “I search for stuff in every guy that is good and spiritual. I just keep talking about bringing out new values.”

The Johnson Institute works to identify and eliminate barriers to recovery. The Institute mobilizes and trains people in recovery for advocacy campaigns, conducts policy research, and promotes congregational team ministries.
